This course will enable early childhood educators to explore various perspectives for creating generative curriculum. We will examine curriculum responses that are dynamic and emergent in quality and consider different processes for connecting children to their full learning potentials and reengage them in the joy of learning. Likewise, students will consider processes for their own continual renewal and readjustments informed by reflection, experimentation, and practice.

Barbara Burrington's Bio

Barbara teaches in the Early Childhood Education PreK-3 Teacher Education Program at The University of Vermont and coordinates the older toddler and preschool programs at the University Lab School. In collaboration with the faculty, staff, and students in the PreK-3 Program, Barbara has been engaged in the study of documentation as a process that promotes inquiry, reflection, and collaboration among all the protagonists of a learning community and serves as a scaffold for creating generative systems of learning and schooling that liberate the integrity and intelligence of all children. Her research has been published in early childhood education chronicles, such as Early Childhood Education Journal and Innovations in Early Education: The International Reggio Exchange, Scholastic Parent & Child, Early Childhood Today
